

An Arbitration Agreement Executed by a Power of Attorney is Deemed Valid by the Missouri Supreme Court

On Tuesday November 19, 2019 the Missouri Supreme Court in Ingram v. Chateau held that an “attorney-in-fact” acting pursuant to a power of attorney, can execute a binding arbitration agreement that is contained as part of a facility’s admission materials.

The incapacitated resident in Ingram was admitted to the facility by their “attorney-in-fact” who was vested with that authority via a durable power of attorney. The durable power of attorney gave the “attorney-in-fact” the specific power to move the resident into the long-term care facility. However, the durable power of attorney did not specifically grant the “attorney-in-fact” the power to execute the admissions agreements on the resident’s behalf.

The Missouri Supreme Court held that a durable power of attorney authorizes the “attorney-in-fact” to “do acts which are incidental to” the authority granted by the durable power of attorney. Thus, if a durable power of attorney allows an “attorney-in-fact” to move a resident into a long-term care facility, the execution of admissions paperwork, including arbitration agreements, is deemed incidental to that and the arbitration agreement is fully enforceable.
